PRACTICAL JOKING IN HIGH LIFE.

The Paris correspondent of the London Globe writes: "Practical joking, I had thought, died out long ago in all decent society; but, it newspapers are to be believed—a thing of which I am not at all certain—I speak, of course, only of those of France and the rest of the continent—it still flourishes in the highest society of this country. Here, for example, greatly condensed, is a story I find in one of the journals of Paris: A distinguished party were a fortnight ago the guests of the Marquis de G—, in the chateau of —, in the neighborhood of Trouville. The ladies of the party being bored, resolved somewhat ungratefully, in order to amuse themselves, to play off a joke on their host. So one night they placed a quantity of flour between the sheets of his bed. At his customary hour the marquis retired to rest, but the strange substance astonished him, and he jumped up. He found himself as white as a miller from head to foot. A few moments' reflection convinced him that he was the victim of a trick. He coolly rang for his valet, made the man scrape him and wash him and change the sheets. He then returned to bed.

"The next morning he said not a word of what had happened. Three evenings after he proposed a drive to a small shooting lodge in the neighborhood, where there was a splendid view, and when he got there he offered the ladies tea. The cake served with the liquid was extraordinarily good, and the fair dames did ample justice to it. They declared that they had never seen anything like it in Paris. 'Yet nothing would be more simple than to make such cakes,' said the Marquis. 'First take your flour,' continued he, with all the solemnity of a cookery book, 'and then roll a man in it.' The ladies looked aghast. 'Yes, mesdames, the cake is made of the flour in which it was your pleasure I should be whitened the other night!' 'Horreur! Quelle horreur!' screamed they."

COAL FOR FARMERS.

"On Little Sewell mountain we met wagons with stone coal for Lewisburg, twenty miles distant, costing ten cents per bushel at the mine on Little Sewell, and selling for thirty-five cents in Lewisburg. It burns very well, and is a good coal for blacksmiths. Farther on, at Mountain Cove, they only pay five cents per bushel, and here it is only three cents. I find that all the coal in this direction is sold by the bushel, taking twenty-eight bushels for a ton. Though surrounded by the finest of forests, all burn coal because of its greater cheapness."

The above paragraph, from a correspondent of the Valley Virginian, is quite suggestive. It is true, as stated, that in the country named farmers are using the coal from Sewell mountain, notwithstanding that the mountains near them abound in wood, because they find the coal cheaper. It saves a vast deal of labor; and the wood that is most convenient to the best farming lands is used for fencing. Coal is essentially an economical fuel, and a great teacher of economy. Its introduction upon the farm saves time, saves labor, and promotes comfort. It is compact, easily sheltered, convenient, and handled easily by the more helpless members of the family.

In considering the new system of economy that must necessarily be pursued in Virginia, we must look to the use of coal as an important item. It is all the more so because the war has swept away the forests, and in some parts of the State has not left a tree for fencing.—Rich. Dispatch.

MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS.

A terrible occurrence has taken place in Russia, at Kineschna, Government District of Kostrowna. About a hundred persons of both sexes, and all ages, were returning joyously from the fair at the village just named, and they entered a ferry-boat to cross the Volga. The vessel was unusually crowded, and when nearing the opposite shore, the ferryman demanded payment of the fares. The crowd of passengers was, in consequence, thrown into a state of motion, and the boat capsized. Not fewer than sixty-three persons were drowned.

The New York Herald states that a comparative statement of prices in New York, Philadelphia, Paris, London, Berlin and other prominent cities in all parts of the world, shows that New York is the most expensive on the globe in the matter of food. The whole cause of this social misfortune lies in the fact that the food itself comes to the consumers through too many middle men, all of whom must make their per centage.

The people living along the Hudson river, in the neighborhood of the place where the steamer Dean Richmond was wrecked, are reaping a good harvest from that disaster.—The cheese, which formed a large part of the cargo of the steamer, is floating up and down the river as the tide ebbs and flows, and parties from both shores put off in boats and capture large quantities.

The rear car of a freight train which started from Albany on Saturday night, broke its coupling as the train was ascending the heavy grade west of the city, and rushed down the track at the rate of fifty miles an hour, coming in collision with a passenger train which had just started from the city, badly smashing the engine and two cars, and killing one passenger.

We learn from a statement before us that the sugar grinding season on some of the Louisiana plantations will commence on or about Saturday. The crop of the coming year is estimated by competent judges at 100,000 hogsheads. So says the New Orleans Bulletin.
